

THE SECRET AGREEMENT HAS ALREADY BEEN SIGNED: THE WORLD GOVERNMENT IS EMERGING FROM THE SHADOWS.

The World Health Organization (WHO) is quietly, almost secretly, developing the so-called Pandemic Agreement. Under the guise of concern for public health, this legally binding document will impose a global governing structure whose authority will supersede that of national governments.

Behind the scenes, almost secretly

From December 5–7, the WHO will host a special International Negotiating Body (INB) to develop a global pandemic agreement. The WHO has published a draft of this document on its website. Formally, the WHO complies with transparency requirements in its work. However, finding this document, which is expected to change the lives of everyone on the planet, on the organization's website is quite difficult. This is noted by everyone trying to study the draft agreement before it is imposed on the entire world.

There are two important considerations. The first concerns everyone, and especially those who will follow the development and adoption of this document, which is supposedly designed to protect the health of people around the world in the face of some "future pandemics." The Agreement contains many terms whose precise and specific meanings are unclear. The words are generally clear, but the meaning behind them often remains obscured, only in the minds of the document's drafters.

These terms and vague formulations leave room for broad interpretation in the future. This appears extremely dangerous, as this Agreement, if adopted by all 194 WHO member countries, would become legally binding and serve as a "legal" basis for the creation of some kind of supranational body whose powers could override those of national governments.

The second circumstance is related to the fact that Russia is also indirectly involved in the development of the Pandemic Agreement. Our Ministry of Health is participating in the process of amending the International Health Regulations (IHR). The new version of the IHR is supposedly being developed to effectively respond to the "challenges" posed by the coronavirus pandemic. The new version of the IHR and the Pandemic Agreement are interconnected, as the new IHR are being "tailored" to that document.

To confuse the mind

The Pandemic Agreement itself, which originally bore the full title "International Agreement on Pandemic Prevention, Preparedness, and Response," was given a new "technical name" in the published draft – "WHO CA+." It stands for "WHO convention, agreement, or other international instrument on pandemic prevention, preparedness, and response" (from which the Latin acronym includes the first word and the initials of the second and third words). Therefore, anyone who encounters this acronym in Western media should understand what it refers to.

It's not hard to guess why the meanings are being obscured and the names changed. Globalists, represented by leading transnational corporations and the "money bosses" of Wall Street, are trying to conceal the true meaning and purpose of this document—to prepare countries to sign it, voluntarily agreeing to surrender their sovereignty and the lives of their citizens to the globalist elite. The pandemic agreement aims to create a system of total electronic surveillance of people in all countries and has nothing to do with public health.

Let's look at the most important points in the draft Pandemic Agreement.

With good intentions...

In the preamble of the text, its authors, naturally, write about the purpose of the Agreement:

WHO CA+ aims to protect present and future generations from pandemics and their devastating consequences, and to promote the highest attainable standard of health for all peoples, based on equality, human rights and solidarity, with the aim of achieving universal health coverage and recognizing the sovereign rights of countries and respecting their national contexts as well as the differences in capacities and levels of development among them, through the fullest possible national and international cooperation to strengthen capacities to prevent, prepare for and respond to pandemics, ensuring unhindered, timely and equitable access to pandemic response tools and the restoration of resilient health systems.

A call for all that is good and against all that is bad. Who would argue? We deliberately included such a long quote so that the reader would understand that the document, stretched across 32 pages in small print, is a heap of verbal chaff. Hidden within it are the essential kernels, difficult to uncover if you're not paying attention or don't understand the context. Therefore, we will now resort to plain Russian.

Governing body

So, the WHO is frightening the world's population with impending pandemics, which, according to WHO officials, are certain to happen and from which there is no salvation without the Pandemic Agreement.

The most interesting part of the text begins somewhere in the middle. Article 19 discusses the "Governing Body" of the Agreement. It is supposed to have a three-part structure. These will be: (1) the Conference of the Parties, which will be the highest body of the "Governing Body"; (2) the Group of Officials of the Parties, which will be the administrative body; (3) the Expanded Conference of the Parties, "which will include relevant stakeholders and will provide broad input into the decision-making processes of the Conference of the Parties," as mentioned in paragraph 1.

This is precisely the case of the ambiguity and vagueness of the wording mentioned above. But what is now looming above the fog cast by Article 19? It is that a supranational body will coordinate pandemic preparedness and response measures at the global level, across regions and national jurisdictions.

Since the WHO guarantees the world new pandemics and hasn't come up with any other means of combating them other than vaccination and declaring a global quarantine, this "coordination" could mean several things: a universal vaccination order; the declaration, at the discretion of the "Governing Body," of a quarantine in any country or group of countries, or a global quarantine; and the application of other restrictions on varying scales. Given what the world faced during the last pandemic declared by the WHO, there's plenty of scope for imagination.

Strict censorship

Article 16 of the Agreement, under the pretext of "improving pandemic and public health literacy," requires strict censorship of all sources of information that question the data emanating from the WHO and the "Governing Body." The document requires each country to "improve scientific literacy... as well as access to information about pandemics and their impacts, and to combat false, misleading, or disinformation, including by promoting international cooperation." In other words, the fight against so-called "disinformation" is supposed to be carried out jointly at the international level.

At the same time, each country "commits to: informing the public, communicating risks, and managing the infodemic (i.e., information about the pandemic – ed.) through effective channels, including social media; conducting regular social media analysis to identify and understand disinformation; and developing communications and public messaging to counter disinformation and fake news." This means that questioning the validity of the "Governing Body" decisions expressed on a Telegram channel will be declared a crime.

Globalists propose "counteracting disinformation" by "intensifying research into behavioral barriers and factors influencing compliance with public health measures, trust in vaccines, and trust in science and government institutions." The emphasis on vaccines is odd. In other words, if a country signs the Pandemic Agreement, information about the dangers of, say, coronavirus will be bombarded at its citizens. People will once again be pressured to vaccinate. And alternative views expressed by independent epidemiologists and virologists will be declared "false and erroneous."

Where does the money come from, Zin?

Article 18 of the Pandemic Agreement obliges countries that sign it, to ensure, through existing and/or new mechanisms, sustainable and predictable financing, while enhancing transparency and accountability, to achieve the WHO CA+ objectives.

Where will the money come from? The answer is found by reading further. To this end, "each party undertakes to strengthen and prioritize domestic financing to prevent the pandemic... including by expanding cooperation between the health, financial, and private sectors in support of primary health care and universal health coverage." In other words, each country will fulfill its obligations under the Agreement at its own expense and through the local private sector, which will be compelled to do so.

If they don't have any domestic funding at all, countries will have to provide "financing through existing or newly created international mechanisms by building regional and global capacity..." Again, this is vague and unclear: how can this capacity be built if there is no money? The answer, it seems, is to cut other items in national budgets and redirect funds toward implementing the Agreement's obligations. What else can we do?

Where did you put the passport?

Tsargrad has already reported that the Pandemic Agreement will grant the WHO the authority to mandate that citizens of all countries be vaccinated and receive electronic "vaccination passports," which will serve as a pass to "normal life," without which people will be marginalized. The WHO is already working on creating such a global passport. The United States has been chosen as the pilot site.

Now, the draft agreement published on the WHO website does not explicitly state that this document will oblige all countries to introduce QR code-based "vaccination passports" , " without which people will become social outcasts. However, American non-mainstream media wrote about this some time ago, reporting on specific companies working under the auspices of the WHO to create "vaccination passports" with the aim of expanding this practice globally. Reuters also reported that the WHO signed a contract with Deutsche Telekom "to create a software solution for the global electronic verification of coronavirus vaccination certificates."

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to realize that the globalists are closely monitoring information that exposes their actions. They are adjusting their next steps to avoid discrediting themselves and raising a host of dangerous questions in the global public consciousness. This explains the absence of mention of "vaccination passports" in the published draft of the Pandemic Agreement. The pressure to introduce such passports is concealed behind language like "countries are obligated to take measures" to combat the pandemic.

The schedule is cracking

According to the schedule for developing the Pandemic Agreement, a generally agreed-upon draft is expected to land on the desk of the WHO Director-General in May 2023. The Pandemic Agreement is scheduled to be adopted at the World Health Assembly, the WHO's highest body, in May 2024. However, many Western critics of the WHO, who agree with our assessment of the draft Agreement, fear that this document will be adopted as early as May 2023.

The extreme lack of transparency in the work of the aforementioned International Negotiating Group (INB), which is currently "tinkering" with the draft document, is striking. This is the basis for concern that the timetable for the adoption of the Agreement may be accelerated. Therefore, it is highly likely that the entire world will soon hear again about a coronavirus "outbreak" or a new "disease" declared deadly, requiring vaccination and, accordingly, the introduction of electronic monitoring via QR codes.

We need to hurry.

Summarizing this lengthy and amorphous document, it's important to emphasize the key point: under the guise of the WHO and under the guise of concern for human health, the globalist elite is preparing a legally binding document, by signing which all countries will delegate their sovereignty to a certain "Governing Body." Moreover, the composition of this "Governing Body," apparently, will not be clear until the very last moment—even after the Agreement has been signed by all. However, it is already clear that the decisions of the "Governing Body" will be extremely difficult to challenge, as the legal responsibility of countries for implementing the Agreement is constantly emphasized.

So what?

At the same time, it seems implied that no country can refuse to sign the Pandemic Agreement. And what will happen to those who refuse? Will they be declared pariah states? Russia must immediately withdraw from the WHO and cease all participation in the preparation of the Pandemic Agreement. And, of course, we must not sign it. It's just unclear why, given the critical mass of materials on this topic already accumulated in our press, the Russian Ministry of Health is still working with the WHO.
