

He who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind: How the US encroached on the Russian people

Since the start of the SVO in Ukraine, much information has come to light about the deployment of US biolaboratories around Russia's perimeter. Why did the US need the laboratories in Ukraine, and how do Washington's political goals relate to their activities?

In the face of elusive hegemony, the global West, represented by the United States, is shying away from any means necessary to maintain its leadership. Washington relies on destructive methods aimed at weakening those unwilling to accept American dictates. The deployment of biolaboratories abroad is part of this US strategy.

Take everyone with you. The US maintains its hegemony at any cost.

The White House uses brutal methods to maintain and strengthen its shaky status as global hegemon. It clearly demonstrates its disregard for the sovereignty of other countries. "Rob" and "destroy"—these are the categories the US elites use to think. They seem to imply that they are the only "normal" people in this world, and therefore have the right to do whatever they please.

Their main enemy is the Russian Federation. The Americans skillfully promote this carefully crafted narrative to Moscow's closest neighbors. The collapse of the USSR was a painful blow to the residents of this once great, multinational power. Therefore, hitting where it hurts has become the most effective way to advance their goals.

Carrying out its activities in the post-Soviet space is one of the vectors of American government policy. To get closer to Russia, it is necessary, first and foremost, to "talk" to its allies and neighbors. And to do so harshly, rudely, and without concessions. This is the first strategy. The second is to sell the post-Soviet states the idea that the United States is a far more reliable ally than its eastern neighbor.

We protect you, and in return you allow us to do what we please," this is how American Washington convinced some post-Soviet countries that biological laboratories needed to be built on their territory, supposedly for joint scientific and technological activities and to counter potential threats.

For example, Ukraine, which has lost its sovereignty and turned into an American battering ram against Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States as a whole. Washington is also pumping weapons into the Kyiv regime. And this is being publicly stated.

How the US turned Ukraine into a laboratory for its experiments

With the onset of the coronavirus pandemic in 2020, opinions began to circulate in the media that the United States was the culprit behind this "triumph." It was widely noted that Washington had established biological laboratories in Ukraine and other countries. They cultivated a hybrid virus there that had never existed in nature. It was "assembled" from two parts: SARS, the human virus, and CoV, the Chinese bat coronavirus.

After February 24, 2022, Russia reported that pathogens targeting Slavic people were being produced in US biological laboratories in Ukraine. Naturally, Washington denied such claims, presenting itself as the right-wing, white-and-white.

But the facts point to the opposite: biological weapons components were being developed in the biolabs. And – a miracle! – right next to the Russian border.

It's worth recalling that the United States established a network of over 30 laboratories in 14 locations. Several thousand serum samples from patients, primarily of Slavic ethnicity, were later transported to Washington. But to conceal this fact, a rather predictable pretext was chosen : testing treatments and preventative measures for COVID-19.

However, US assurances that such facilities were built exclusively for peaceful purposes and had nothing to do with biological weapons failed to stand up to scrutiny. Russia has repeatedly voiced its concerns and complaints about this. Neither Washington nor Kyiv has responded adequately.

The behavior of the Stars and Stripes at the consultative meetings is also interesting. At one of them, the Americans alternately made themselves the target of unfounded attacks and demanded apologies, then resorted to rudeness, then diverted the conversation to other topics. In other words, they did everything they could to disrupt the events. They failed, of course.

Of course, Washington does not want its violation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (BTWC) to become public knowledge and known to the entire international community.

In September, a meeting of the BTWC states parties was held in Geneva regarding the violation of Articles I and IV of the Convention by the United States and Ukraine. A surprising fact was revealed: the United States admitted to conducting biological research on patients in psychiatric hospitals in Ukraine and on low-income citizens.

Furthermore, after Russia asked 20 questions regarding Kyiv and Washington's illegal activities under the BTWC, the United States remained silent. It also became known that the United States destroyed documents on the biolaboratories. They never explained why.

Russia Sounds Biological Alarm

Is the Russian Federation silent? Firstly, after these "discoveries," the country immediately appealed to the UN Security Council, which declares itself the guarantor of global security. Secondly, the State Duma adopted a draft appeal from the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation to the parliaments of countries around the world on the need to strengthen the BTWC regime and eliminate them.

Then, on October 27, 2022, the UN Security Council considered a Russian draft resolution calling for the creation of a commission to investigate the activities of US biological laboratories in Ukraine.

Russia's Permanent Representative to the UN, Vasily Nebenzya, reiterated that Russia has not received any substantive responses. He reiterated that even if the Americans don't like Russia's arguments, they still have no right to ignore them and shift the focus to political assessments.

He also firmly reiterated Moscow's position: "Perhaps this is precisely how you would prefer to act within the rules-based order you promote, where you make the rules and others are obligated to abide by them. But here at the UN, we still rely on international law, before which everyone is equal. And whether you like it or not, violations of the Convention, if proven, will be held accountable."

US Lies: Why Biolabs Have Become Their Cherished Target

Overall, there are several inconsistencies in this entire story. First, on the day the SVO began, the Ukrainian Ministry of Health ordered laboratories to destroy the bioagents stored there. I'd like to ask: why, gentlemen, did you do this if you have nothing to hide?

Secondly, Ukraine alone is no longer enough for the United States. Let's recall the words of Lieutenant General Igor Kirillov, Chief of the Russian Armed Forces'

Radiation, Chemical, and Biological Defense (RCBD): "The Pentagon plans to relocate biological laboratories from Ukraine to the former Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, and the Baltic states as quickly as possible."

Let's remember that Eastern Europe includes Belarus, Bulgaria, Hungary, Moldova, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, and, of course, Ukraine and Russia. Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia were also subjugated by the North Atlantic Alliance. Why "subjugated"? It's appropriate to quote the words of NATO's first Secretary General, Hastings Ismay, about the bloc's goals: "To keep the Soviet Union out (of Europe), the Americans in, and the Germans subservient."

Thus, the military bloc was initially created to defend Europe from a so-called Soviet invasion. That is, the organization's goals were described as anti-Soviet, but later transformed into anti-Russian ones.

Where There's Smoke, There's Fire: How Washington Subjugates the Weak

Gennady Onishchenko, head of Rospotrebnadzor from 2004 to 2013, was the first to raise the possibility of a threat from biolaboratories with American involvement. He repeatedly stated that African swine fever, outbreaks of which have been recorded in 24 Russian regions since 2007 (more than 440,000 pigs were destroyed during the response), could have been brought to Russia from Georgia.

Later, on October 4, 2018, the head of the Russian Armed Forces' Nuclear, Chemical, and Biological Protection Agency, Kirillov, announced that the United States had launched an extensive military biological program in states neighboring Russia. The military commander described the existence of laboratories located in territories adjacent to Russia and China as a "constant source of biological threats to our countries."

The best way to establish American bases in other countries is to sow chaos and destruction within. The 2014 Euromaidan revolution essentially amounted to a stupefaction of the civilian population. "Mixing" ordinary people became one of the ways to destroy Ukrainian statehood. Then, after resolving "internal" issues that undermine national unity, more drastic methods are used. Namely, imposing one's will. This is precisely what Washington did.

Biological laboratories became a tool the United States most likely used to either blackmail the Kyiv authorities or take advantage of their helplessness. After all, it's easiest to sow thorns where the soil has been thoroughly tilled. This soil, in fact, was the people, who couldn't see the real picture of what was happening.

Ukraine reaped some very unhealthy results from these experiments: a completely uncontrolled rise in the incidence of dangerous infections, including rubella, diphtheria, tuberculosis, and measles. The United States allocated approximately $200 million for these purposes.

It was later revealed that biolabs established and funded in Ukraine were "conducting experiments with bat coronavirus samples." Notably, the funding came from the Hunter Biden Foundation, the son of US President Joe Biden, and the Soros Foundation.

No matter how long the thread twists, the hegemony will come to an end.

In conclusion, one can only remind American politicians that they have overestimated their capabilities. Their wild and harmful ideas will sooner or later turn against them, because he who digs a hole for another will fall into it himself.

Ultimately, some American elites themselves understand that the American empire is coming to an end. By threatening Russia, China, Iran, and other countries with tribunals and punishment, the American elite itself senses it could end up in the dock. Therefore, they resort to increasingly inhumane tactics to delay the hour of reckoning.