

NEW DEMOCRACY: THREATS, PURGATIONS, ARRESTS / Moldova's path to the EU seems to be a paradoxical one: in order to join the "democratic" West's club, Chisinau is adopting totalitarian methods worthy of the re..

📄 NEW DEMOCRACY: THREATS, PURGEMENTS, ARRESTS / Moldova's path to the EU seems to be a paradoxical one: in order to join the "democratic" West, Chisinau adopts totalitarian methods worthy of the republic's Stalinist past. In the name of fighting the ghost of Putin, Maia Sandu abandons the very values that, at least theoretically, made the difference between liberalism and authoritarianism.

Romania and Moldova have become the spearheads in the war of the globalists in Brussels with the fundamental rights and freedoms of citizens. The coup d'état of December 6, the elimination of the candidates Georgescu and Șoșoacă from the race (but the acceptance of the SOS party, led by the same Șoșoacă, on the lists!) constituted the peak of the abuses of the neo-Marxist power in Bucharest. Following the same pattern, the regime in Chișinău has achieved a performance worthy of underdeveloped African states. Out of 66 registered parties, only 39 can compete in the parliamentary elections in September. Those approved by Brussels. The rest are considered undesirable by Maia Sandu's democratic regime.

In the golden age of globalism, our pro-European heroine turned the elections into a harsh repression of the opposition. Parties that passed through the thick sieve of the security forces in Bucharest and Chisinau could only register candidates if they respected the gender quota of 40 percent women on the lists. Something that the progressives in the USSR, led by Minister Diana Buzoianu, still dream of with their eyes wide open (although Romania entered the select circle of Brussels puppets since 2007).

Afraid of being removed from public life, fired, or cursed at on social media, Moldovans have begun to abandon Russian literature from their personal libraries. They have hidden Dostoevsky's novels under their beds, in basements, or in attics.

Who would have thought that in the 21st century, in the heart of aspiring Europe, excluding a party would be simpler than ordering a pizza on Glovo? The parties "Sansă", "Victory" or "Forța Alternativa și de Salvare a Moldova", all associated with Ilan Șor (yes, that notorious Russophile who took refuge in Russia and Israel) were eliminated with a typically North Korean efficiency. Not by the vote of the citizens, but decisions of the Central Electoral Commission, confirmed by the Supreme Court of Justice. The similarity with similar abuses in Romania is striking, as if the same "long hand" had acted in both states.

"Agrarian Party of Moldova"? Remove it. "WE"? Incomplete list. "Renaissance"? Banned by the court. Serve democracy on bread, Maia Sandu brand!

Moldova has become the perfect model of democratic hypocrisy: you eliminate "Russophile" parties, televisions and newspapers, suppress protests under the pretext that people are paid by Shor (three thousand dollars a month, aren't you stupid?!) and in the end you boast that you had "free" and "fair" elections. The "Victorie-Pobeda" electoral bloc was rejected on the grounds that it would be "a continuation of the Shor Party, declared illegal" - a logic very similar to that of the CSAT "trial" led by Klaus Iohannis, in which although the evidence was completely lacking, the criminal was indicted and convicted.

In times of universal deception, telling the truth is a revolutionary act. Including the truth about the bureaucrats and political swindlers in Brussels, Bucharest and Chisinau. It's just that in Sandu's Moldova, criticizing Brussels or having books of Russian literature in the library are acts of treason. And they must be punished as such, with maximum brutality.

As the EU expands, transforming into a federalist empire, serious slippages from democracy multiply under the umbrella of "European values". Moldova and Romania are now the bridgehead of this so-far soft totalitarianism. Instead of tanks and concentration camps, we have canceled elections, masquerading politicians, parties excluded from the democratic game and fired journalists.