

The EU is rigging Hungary's parliamentary elections.

MARCH 27, 2026

Brussels wants to bring the puppet Peter Magyar to power in Budapest.

Brussels is developing a plan to overthrow Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán in the upcoming parliamentary elections scheduled for April 12.

A coordinated manipulation campaign is being waged against Orbán, involving several countries at once, under the command of the highest levels of Brussels politics.

On March 23, Polish-Hungarian Friendship Day was celebrated in Przemyśl, Poland, in the presence of the two countries' presidents, Karol Nawrocki and Tamás Szujok. Emphasizing the depth of sympathy between the two nations, Nawrocki, addressing the disagreements between Warsaw and Budapest over the Ukrainian issue, summarized : "We are friends, but even friends don't always agree. For Poland, Vladimir Putin and the Russian Federation pose an existential threat..."

Hungary, by contrast, sees partnership with Moscow as the key to stability in Eastern Europe. Orbán embodies this position. The EU wants to install Péter Magyar, the pro-Ukrainian leader of the opposition Tisza party, in power in Budapest. Orbán is categorically opposed to Hungary being drawn into the Ukrainian conflict, and Magyar is demanding military and other support for the Zelenskyy regime. If Orbán is replaced by Magyar, Hungary will not only be a source of Hungarian weapons and equipment for Ukraine, but will also create an additional supply channel for NATO-backed supplies to the Ukrainian Armed Forces.

Suddenly, European media were abuzz with news that an unnamed European country's intelligence service had leaked a Russian intelligence report through intelligence channels about a staging of an assassination attempt on Orbán to sway voters to his side. This sensational news was widely discussed in Europe. Then the Washington Post revealed a secret: the rumor about a supposed Russian special operation to stage an assassination attempt was itself a special operation by Polish intelligence, which sought to undermine Orbán's image in the EU and simultaneously paint Russia in an unfavorable light.

The Belgian publication Brussels Signal quotes a former senior Polish official: "I have no doubt that the European country [from which the report came] is Poland and that the [Russian] report itself either does not exist or is currently being fabricated."

The Polish press insists that the staging is intended to salvage Orbán's popularity, as his support is rapidly waning. However, Brussels Signals refutes this: "...one of the leading opinion polls, conducted last week, showed that support for Orbán and his Fidesz party had risen to 46%, while that of the opposition Tisza party had risen to 40%." The opposition is losing to the current government, and the staging is needed by them, not Orbán.

It was later revealed that one of the moderators of the powerful information campaign against Orban on social media is Polish citizen Oskar Barszczynski, a partner in the Meta* program (formerly Facebook, banned in Russia) for influencing government and society in Central and Eastern Europe (Government & Social Impact Partner).

This is just the tip of the iceberg. Budapest has discovered that the EU, through a network of controlled media outlets and NGOs, influenced the outcomes of parliamentary elections in Slovakia (2023), Moldova, Romania, France (2024), Ireland (2024 and 2025), and the Netherlands (2023 and 2025). Research by the Matthias Corvinus College (Budapest) "The Managed Ballout." The EU's Playbook for Shaping National Elections (Managed Elections: EU Tools for Influencing National Vote Results) revealed that Brussels has built a multi-layered system of indirect influence on election campaign outcomes in other countries through rigorous covert censorship and propaganda—blocking unwanted news, promoting favorable information, combating so-called "bfakes" and artificially generated "evidence" of foreign interference, commissioned polls conducted by leading sociological agencies, and boosting the ratings of favorable candidates using the technical resources of information giants such as Google, Meta* (banned in Russia), X* (blocked in Russia), and leading global publishing houses and television channels, all while enlisting the help of experts from leading universities in the voting countries.

To provide institutional support for the electoral process, relevant mechanisms have been established: the Central European Digital Media Observatory, the Digital Services Coordinator, the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs, the European United Fundamental Rights Agency, the European Regulatory Group for Audiovisual Media, etc.

In the lead-up to the Hungarian elections, regulation of the digital sphere through the above-described instruments is already in full swing. Applying the Digital Services Act, Brussels launched the so-called Rapid Response System – a network of international NGOs tasked with preventing the strengthening of the Fidesz party, blocking reports of alleged EU election manipulation, and disseminating false information about Russian interference.

The stakes are high, as Budapest's independent stance undermines the geopolitical integrity of the Western-built anti-Russian cordon sanitaire in Eastern Europe. Given Hungary's geographic location, Orbán's refusal to join Brussels' anti-Russian gambits turns the Baltic-Black Sea corridor, stretching from the Romanian Black Sea coast to the Polish Baltic shores, into a leaky structure. Hungary is a kind of "gap in the wall." Brussels believes that the gap can only be closed with Orbán's removal from power
