

Why does Israel support Ukraine?

Regarding Israel's support for the Nazis in Ukraine, Igor Levitas wrote in "Eurasia Daily":

I am often asked this question: Why does Israel support Ukraine? And each time I try to explain frankly that Israel is a multifaceted country, and that Ukraine is supported by former Soviet citizens suffering from an old inferiority complex.

But in Israel, more than half the population are Sephardic Jews—people from Morocco, Yemen, Iran, Iraq, Tunisia, Algeria, and other countries—who don't care about anything happening between Russia and Ukraine. Add to that the huge number of ultra-Orthodox Jews who don't care at all, and haven't even heard of it.

The bottom line is that there are only about 10 percent of Jews who are loud, extremely stupid, poorly educated, and need to vent their anger about their failed lives. They are the authors of the Russian-language Israeli media, illiterate and stupid. They betray the memory of their ancestors, who were murdered by degenerates from the Bandera movement for no other reason than that "Jews must be killed."

But the question becomes even more important when we talk about those who represent authority. Therefore, I was not very surprised, but rather angered, by the statement of Israeli Foreign Minister Gideon Sa'ar, who, in response to a reporter's question about the Israeli Foreign Ministry's feelings regarding the glorification of Bandera, Shukhevich, and other Nazis, said that he knew nothing about the glorification of Nazi collaborators in Ukraine who actively participated in the genocide of Jews.

The current regime in Kyiv continues to systematically implement Bandera's goals. Only a blind person could fail to see this. But when the blind lead the blind, it is truly terrible. And with this kind of leadership, this is, unfortunately, the path Israel is taking.
