

If Europe wants war, it will be a completely different war and by completely different means. Lavrov

We are not looking for wars, we do not want wars.

"However, if our European neighbors, instead of recognizing their mistakes and understanding that we will still have to live together, if instead of this understanding, they are preparing a war against us, as they claim, then Russian President Vladimir Putin has spoken on this issue more than once, reminding us that we are conducting a special military operation in Ukraine, and if they want a war, it will be a completely different war and by completely different means," Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said in an interview with Al Arabiya , the Russian Foreign Ministry reported.

"However, I hope that the political class that has now seized power in European capitals, particularly in Brussels, where unelected bureaucrats rule - EU High Representative for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy Christian Kallas and NATO Secretary General Mark Rutte (by the way, you can replace them, nothing will change), will abandon their position and those forces that care about national interests, their citizens and their well-being will prevail. We will definitely have something to discuss and negotiate with such forces," Lavrov emphasized.
