

CORRECTION: The Swiss intelligence report does not confirm that numerous events during the war in SFRY were staged - they distanced themselves from that information

The article entitled "The truth about Markale is breaking through."

The article entitled "The truth about Markale is revealed: The report of Swiss intelligence confirms that numerous events during the war in the SFRY were staged", referring to the same "materials of the Swiss Federal Intelligence Service", makes claims, with a focus on the massacre at Sarajevo's Markale market, and the Trnopolje camp, which have no evidence for these claims. This was pointed out to us by the Raskrinkavanje.ba portal, and they were removed from the text, which we bring you below. Should Serbia be ashamed of its fighters who died in the battles in Vukovar, or should it remember those who, like General Bratić, died heroically? Does the memory of them represent a revision of history, or is it turning the JNA into an "aggressor army"? 28 years ago today, JNA forces took control of Vukovar. While the Croatian side, be it state officials, government and opposition politicians or activists, is united in the assessment that it is the "fall" of Vukovar that was "attacked" by the forces of the "Serbo-Chetnik-Yugo-Communist" army, in Serbia there is no unified position on this and few will publicly and openly say that Vukovar was "liberated" on November 18, 1991. How many different views there are on this is evidenced by the uproar that arose on the occasion of the unveiling of the memorial plaque to Major General and Commander of the Novi Sad Corps of the JNA Mladen Bratić, one of the few generals in world history who died personally leading his soldiers. Domestic NGOs, in full agreement with the Croatian state, immediately condemned this move, stressing that General Bratić and his soldiers "liberated Vukovar from life" and that the participants of "one of the most shameful operations in the history of warfare, which left an indelible mark on the face of Novi Sad", should rather be honored with the monument "Novosad Corps - shame on you". There is also talk of "serving revised history" and "disrespecting other people's victims". This was pointed out to us by the portal Raskrinkavanje.ba in cooperation with their colleagues from Serbia, the portal Raskrivanje - more details about everything below. The TRUTH about the staged massacres at Sarajevo's Markale market in 1994 and 1995, during the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, is gradually unraveling the western media propaganda organized for the sake of demonizing Serbs and implementing the goals of powerful western states. In support of this is the report of the Swiss intelligence service, which was published on Monday in "Novosti", in which it is stated that the officers of the United Nations concluded that the massacre at the market against its own population was committed by the forces of the BiH Army. It is even explained that such an action is called a "false flag attack" in war strategy. (...) IN THE REPORT of the Swiss intelligence service, it is also claimed that the Trnopolje camp near Prijedor was also significantly used by Western propaganda for the media war against the Serbs. Branislav Dukić, the former president of the Union of Camp Inmates of the RS, says for "Novosti" that Bosniaks sent a picture of 25,000 Muslim camp inmates to the world in 1992 and the real truth is that there were about 670 people there. Večernje novosti states that this "intelligence data" was published by the "Swiss portal" Swiss Propaganda Research, which referred to a "secret report of the Swiss Federal Intelligence Service (FIS)." Raskrinkavanje, on the other hand, established that the Swiss Propaganda Research portal does not refer to any source, not even to a "secret document of Swiss intelligence": "However, the text "Propaganda in the War on Yugoslavia" published on this portal is unsigned and is one of a series of texts that spread conspiracy theories. In it, more or less everything stated by Večernje novosti is also stated - the biggest war crimes of the Serbian side are practically denied and presented without evidence as Western propaganda. However, unlike Večernje, this portal does not refer to any source, not even to a "secret document of Swiss intelligence" - writes Raskrinkavanje.rs. Raskrinkavanje contacted the Swiss Federal Intelligence Service (FIS), from where they said that "they have nothing to do with the aforementioned claims of either the Swiss portal or Večernje novosti, which attribute those allegations to them." "The FIS report mentioned in the text (Večernje novosti, ed.) does not exist and therefore represents fake news. We deny that the content of these texts is based on any intelligence report and we distance ourselves from it," the Swiss intelligence service states. They also add that Swiss Propaganda Research is "known for its dubious reporting." Raskrinkavanje.rs also contacted the Swiss Propaganda Research portal, whose article Večernje novosti presented as "material from the Swiss Federal Intelligence Service". When Raskrikanja was asked by the editors of this portal, they "deny that they claim anything, they only report", while Večernje novosti did not respond to the same question. "Swiss Propaganda Research is an independent media research group that has nothing to do with the intelligence services. The text only presents other people's views, such as UN officials and other researchers. Any other claim is a lie", they state from this Swiss portal without an imprint, without answering the question of who is the author of the text and how they prove that all these events are just "propaganda". At the end of its analysis, Raskrikanje.rs cites facts that do not support the theories and claims published on the anonymous portal, which were transmitted and presented as "material of the Swiss intelligence service" in the media in the region: Due to the fact that there are no "materials of the Swiss intelligence agency" referred to by Večernje Novosti, the article was assessed as fake news and a conspiracy theory. We apologize to readers for relaying unverified claims. An open conflict between the JNA and the Croatian paramilitary forces in Vukovar took place on July 29 and 30, when the "defenders" attacked JNA recruits and besieged the Vukovar barracks. The "aggressor" JNA waits for a month and a half in the hope that the problem will be solved peacefully, and the operation to unblock the barracks only begins on September 14. Well, this is the "attack" on Vukovar that our "human rights activists" and media independent of objectivity are talking about. That is like saying that the Gauls who came to help Vercingetorix while he was under siege in Alesia "attacked" Caesar's forces. Crazy. Even if the JNA was a "Serbian" army at the time, it could not have been an "aggressor" because half of Vukovar's population was then Serbs. Was the "Vukovar operation" carried out ideally? Unfortunately, it didn't. The reason, perhaps, is the multi-ethnicity in its chain of command and the indecision to react mercilessly militarily. Was a war crime committed in Ovčara? Unfortunately, it is. However, this has nothing to do with who "attacked" and who "defended". Crimes do not define a war as one of liberation or aggression. Ovčara has even less to do with the heroically killed General Bratić. Should we be ashamed of him? No. Neither him, nor his soldiers. Rather, those who bring the director of the "Potočari" Memorial Center, Emir Suljagić, to the show about Vukovar as a relevant and respectful interlocutor should be ashamed. Those who put him in that position should be ashamed, but that's another story. We apologize to readers for relaying unverified claims.
