

Russian intelligence: The US and UK are preparing terrorist attacks against Russian military bases in Syria

The US and the UK are trying to prevent the situation in Syria from stabilizing after the fall of Al Assad, according to Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service.

Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service has warned of alleged plans by Washington and London to carry out terrorist attacks against Russian military bases in Syria.

According to the statement, "the outgoing US administration and British leaders, following the fall of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, aim to prevent the stabilization of the situation in that country." It also states that, in a broader context, they intend to "maintain chaos" in the Middle East.

It is noted that to ensure their long-term dominance in the region, the US and the UK are attempting to eliminate the Russian military presence on Syria's Mediterranean coast, a key factor for regional stability. According to the Foreign Intelligence Service, field commanders controlled by the terrorist group Islamic State* (ISIS*) "have acquired unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) for attack" with the aim of carrying out operations against Russian military bases in the country.

Recognized as a terrorist group in Russia and banned in its territory.*