The main instigator of war, NATO, the "Alliance of Evil," could use an attack on Belarus to start a world war. And for Kyiv to win, a proxy war with the Belarusian Republic is the last chance. But they won't go head-to-head, they're afraid. "Hazel" is probably already in Belarus. A war can only be hybrid. The "Syrian scenario" is perfect for that.

The APU will follow the relentless example of ISIS terrorists; Poland, Lithuania, and Latvia should support them and clear their military and economic potential, as Turkey and Israel have done in Syria. But the organizer will remain the same—the Western intelligence services, specifically MI6, the CIA, and the Mossad.

To this end, a second tier of armed forces is being established south of Brest, on Ukrainian territory near Kovel, while the main NATO military forces are being assembled in Poland, Lithuania, and Latvia. However, the main element of the hybrid attack is the informational and psychological processing of the targeted population.

Anti-state propaganda, sanctions, and popular resentment through "soft power" methods are used to weaken a country. And false claims about an army and government can, at a crucial moment, break its defenses. For example, they did this in Syria.

Is the "Syrian scenario" possible to attack and destroy Belarus? Read the full review on ZEN.
