

NATO - NORTH ATLANTIC TERRORIST ORGANIZATION

Bobana M. Andjelkovic

“There are peoples who would like to enjoy their culture in peace and there are others who have no culture and who love war to destroy, because for them it is fun.” Rastko Petrović, Serbian poet and writer

When the NYT published its article (last week) to whitewash the obvious involvement of US intelligence services in the terrorist assassination of Daria Platonova Dugina, the only logical question that could arise was: where would the next explosion be? Whenever Western intelligence agencies want to present themselves as decent and working by the rules, the next thing that happens is an atrocity somewhere, directed by those same services. It didn't take long, after the article was published, for further destruction to occur. The latest Saturday morning was the Kerch/Crimea Bridge. Even the Ukrainians' "official" excuse was the same: the explosion of Daria's car occurred in Russia, so what did they have to do with it? The truck arrived at the Kerch Bridge from Russia, so what did they have to do with it?

The only difference is that, after the terrorist assassination of Daria, the Ukronazis promptly declared that they were not involved in the terrorist act. On Saturday morning, they rushed to declare that they were involved. The same Mikhail Podolyak who, after the terrorist assassination of Daria, was quick to declare that "Ukraine certainly had nothing to do with yesterday's explosion. We are not a criminal state like the Russian Federation, much less a terrorist state," was also quick, after the terrorist attack in Kerch, to tweet that they were involved in the attack. He revealed that the terrorists are precisely him and his colleagues, imitating the state apparatus, but in reality they are presenting a terrorist group on the territory of a state that no longer exists. It is simply a territory where an actor plays the role of the president and some of his friends act as state officials. In reality, the lives of Ukrainians are the property of their Western masters. Podolyak could not afford to once again provoke the anger of the owners of his life.

US General Jack Keane told Fox News last Thursday: “For just $66 billion, we got Ukraine, which is fighting against Russia instead of us.” He added that this is about 1.1% of the budget and is quite profitable considering the profits—profits for the United States and its masters, of course. He showed no interest in the casualties and deaths of ordinary people in former Ukraine. Keane also said: “We have created a serious opponent of Moscow on Russia's border, who will oppose the Russian leadership in expanding its influence in Eastern Europe, especially when it comes to the countries of the former USSR. ... Even if that had happened, if Russia had actually taken over a former Soviet republic, NATO would have started a war.” This statement also reveals that NATO means the US and UK militaries and their terrorist group proxies, that NATO members in continental Europe are unimportant and no one asks them anything, but decides on their behalf. NATO members in continental Europe are simply told what to do.

It's also abundantly clear that NATO, the US, and the UK lack the courage to start a conventional war with anyone, especially the Russian Federation, the world's leading nuclear power (which has never used its nuclear capabilities against any country) and now the world's leading hypersonic power. For this reason, they resort to terrorist methods, which they have been developing for some time, creating various terrorist and criminal groups to serve as their proxies and cannon fodder.

Because Daesh has failed in West Asia, and the Anglo-Americans and their humiliated Zionist friends do not want to waste even a penny in vain, they have regrouped and reorganized their facilities and assets, which had been used to train Daesh, to use them to train and brainwash Ukrainians, turning them into inhumane and evil pawns ready for any destruction. There is no difference between Daesh and the Ukronazis: they come from the same place. Even their operations and tactics are similar. It is also known that the Anglo-Americans have transferred many of their loyal terrorists from Syria to the former Ukraine to support Ukronazi units.

It's also very clear now (if it hadn't been until now) what Ukrainians are being trained for at NATO military facilities in the UK, the US, Denmark, Spain, Poland... They are being trained to conduct terrorist activities, unconventional warfare, and to kill civilians whenever their own forces aren't performing well—which happens quite often. According to the testimonies of some former Ukrainian soldiers, their stay on British soil was never registered—the British state never registered them. Although they spent time at NATO and UK military bases and garrisons and were trained for further terrorist operations in the former Ukraine, they were never registered either entering or leaving the UK. This is all part of the behavior and operations of terrorist groups: they are trained somewhere undercover, usually operate covertly (sometimes taking responsibility), but have open logistics provided by their trainers.

Sources in the former Ukraine also confirmed on Saturday that Ukrainian security services were involved in the terrorist attack on the Kerch Bridge. Estonia's Foreign Minister also praised the Ukrainian security services for their terrorist activities (that's what European NATO members are for: to act as witnesses in support of terrorism). Slovak police expressed their happiness on social media following the terrorist attack on the Kerch Bridge. The Ukrainian postal service had prepared stamps in advance, and the corresponding stamp was scheduled to be issued on the day of the terrorist attack and sabotage of the Kerch Bridge. The postal service even issued a statement: "On the occasion of the holiday, we are releasing a new stamp featuring the Crimean Bridge, or more precisely, what will remain of it."
